WHAT TO TAKE ON YOUR ENDURANCE FLIGHT T will undoubtedly take quite a while for endurance flights to die down. Rome was not built in a day. It took the English Channel the better part of two years to be thoroughly swum by women. And flagpole sitting, Marathon rocking, &c., are going on yet.

marathon rocking, &c., are going on yet, yet is reasonable to suppose, therefore, that endurance flights will not be over before a year from now. They will get longer and longer until Mesars, O'Brine's and Jackson's feat will seem like a roller coaster ride.

Now, what is the equipment needed for taking up this fascinating sport?

Well, we are herewith listing the most important essentials for amateur endurance flyers to take along.

The first thing to be packed in the cockpit is a large supply of note paper. Bix or seven hundred reams should be enough, unless you are planning to stay up for a year. Note paper is a neglection, and the price. Sprigs of fresh mint add flavor, and a cooling note to the summer drinks, fruit cups and salads. When a more pronounced mint flavor is desired the leaves are minced and sprinkled over the food or drink.

Desserts of many kinds, water tess, sherbets, ice creams, jellies, whisper of cooling mint. So do after dimer candles, tiny gum drops for decorating cakes and desserts, cream and pastes. Candied mint leaves are a fayorite garnishment or sweetmest.

Sauces, butters and vinegar also carry the mint essence into the menu. Chopped mint leaves enliven French dressing.

Cubes of clear mint jelly, delicately green, garnish the well-chilled fruit cup, the mid-summer salad and the cold citt platter most agreeably as tasts and eye bear witness.

The cook books show two recipes for making mint jelly, and each has its advocates. One jelly is prepared from russhed mint leaves and gelatine, while the other is a mint-flavored apple or cider jelly.

The recipe generally in use isi.
